

What JFK Means to Me

Selena Wu

John Fitzgerald Kennedy, who was born on May 29, 1917, was a World War II hero and survivor, and the 35th President of the United States of America. I think that JFK was a great leader, and that he made the world a better place.

There are many ways JFK made the world a better place. One of them is that he started the Peace Corps, an organization where people can sign up to go to different countries and help people with medical care, help build schools, help plant and harvest crops, and help with many more things. Another way JFK made the world a better place is that he worked with Robert Kennedy, his brother, and Martin Luther King Jr. to end segregation, which is when people can't do things that others can, just because of the color of their skin.

Another way JFK made the world a better place is that he decreased the chance of nuclear war with Cuba. JFK signed a treaty with the leader of the Soviet Union, Nikita Khrushchev, to limit the testing of nuclear weapons, after nuclear missiles were found in Cuba. The last way JFK made the world a better place is that he started the Food for Peace, which gave food to countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America where they do not have enough to eat. Those are some of the ways JFK made the world a better place.

JFK was a good man and did a lot of things to make our country - no, our world a better place. I hope I grow up to be more like JFK and change the world for the better! That is what JFK means to me.
